JUDGE MORSE REFUSES RE-QUEST OF PRISONER.

DETER MORTENSEN will not be granted a new trial according to the decision of Judge Morse in district court yesterday. His attorneys, however, will in all probability attempt to plead the case of their client before the higher court. The motion ruled by Judge Morse, who declared that on none of the four points which had been raised by the defense was there sufficient cause shown for granting another hearing of the case.

Ing another hearing of the case.

Battling for time, Attorney Stewart for the defense, at once asked for a respite in which to file a motion in arrest of judgment. He was opposed in his efforts to gain a few days longer for his client by District Attorney Eichnor, who objected to the request on the grounds that there was no real reason for delay in passing sentence, but insisted that the defense was merely playing for time with the hope of eventually saving the life of the accused.

Mortensen himself, the condemned murderer of James R. Hay, was visibly affected by the decision of the court, and for the second time since his ar-rest permitted his apparent stoicism and indifference to give place to bitter grief, which was detected by the stream of tears which trickled slowly down his face. ビドドドドアンスアアアアド

NEW STAGE MANAGER.

James H. Lewis Succeeded in "Corianton" by Charles R. Bowers.
James H. Lewis, under whose direction "Corianton" was produced, resigned his position as stage director yesterday, and Charles R. Bowers, to whom is due the credit for the scenery and costumes of the production, was appointed to the piace. It is denied that the change is the result of any trouble or dissension, the fact being that when Mr. Lewis first took charge of the production it was understood that should the work prove too hard for him, he would be allowed to give it up, but would still play the part of Korihor.

Mr. Lewis is somewhat advanced in years, and the management of the big company behind the scenes proved too much of a strain on him.

Heath started boldly across the lot with the men in advance. They reached one of the bushes and went on each side. When Heath had passed the bush he realized that he was looking into the business end of two revolvers and obeyed at once the command to hold up his hands. One of the highwaymen kept him covered with the weapon
while the other made a thorough search of his clothing. All the money in his possession $8.55 was taken but a cold while the other made a thorough search of his clothing. All the money in his possession, $8.75, was taken, but a gold watch and chain was missed by the robbers on account of the darkness. Completing their search, they ordered the man to go straight home, and threatened serious results in the event that police officers were notified. No arrests have been made, although the men are described almost identically as the ones who have committed the numerous hold-ups of late. One is tall, while the other is much shorter.
